

The "PJs for PJ"

Inclusive Coloring Book

Celebrating a world with differences

A fun coloring book that children with differences, special needs, and disabilities can relate to. This inclusive coloring book can also be used as a fun, teachable tool for children without differences. (The captions are intentionally simplified and vague and only meant to assist as conversation starters.)

This inclusive coloring book cannot possibly capture all unique circumstances and does not specify any diagnosis but features hair loss, hospital settings, limb difference, facial difference, tracheostomy (breathing tube), gastrostomy (feeding tube), and the use of walkers, wheelchairs, prosthetics, sensory headphones, glasses, hearing aids and sign language.

Dedicated to our craniofacial family and to all the amazing, warrior children and their families, advocates, friends and support systems. And to PJ, my little wonder. I love you more than everything!

Some people use tools to help them move better. Elliot, Sophia and Jaden like to race through the clouds on rainbows. Jaden wears sensory headphones sometimes, but he still loves to hear the birds chirp and sing.

PJ may look different, but he likes to do all the same things you do....
like pretend he's an astronaut floating through space.
It's difficult to hear in space, so PJ uses sign language to communicate.
He's using his hand to say, "I love you".

Keegan and Nova love to have tea parties in a field of flowers and butterflies. Keegan has a device to help her breathe better, and Nova uses a device to help her hear better.

Courtney and Parker love to swim with the dolphins in the ocean.
Courtney was born with one arm that is different, and Parker has a tube in his belly to help him eat his food.

Emily has to stay in the hospital sometimes, but she is never lonely when "Hiccups the Clown", "Jono the Therapy Dog" and her friend, Lilly, come to visit.
